Are We Still Driving Horses?

I am sure that, if we take a good, unbiased look at our present methods of conducting shuffleboard tournaments, we will have to conclude that we may still be driving the horse and buggy in this sport. For instance, look at baseball. They play nine innings (or in case of a tie, continue until one team breaks the tie). But both teams always having equal times at bat.

Why should not shuffleboard use similar methods; thus eliminating the 2-, 3- or 4-hour games which plays havoc with the tournament and greatly delays the game?

Golf is also limited to just so many holes. Basketball and football games are limited to just so much time. Maybe if enough shuffleboard players in Florida would make an appeal to the State Rules Committee, asking that a game consist of so many frames, with both sides having equal number of last shots—it is just possible that they might sell Old Dobbin and buy a car.
